Human Resource Planning

An Introduction to Human Resources

- In common with all resources, a businesses employees, known as its human resources, need to be managed
- Effective human resource management is important as
 - It ensures that the organisation has the right people in the right roles with the right support and with opportunities to succeed, as well as a positive work environment
 - This will lead to higher productivity, improved efficiency and a competitive advantage

How effective human resource management can provide a competitive advantage

- Staff represent both an asset and a cost to a business
 - Staff are an asset to a business as they bring knowledge, skills, and expertise to the business
 - Staff can increase productivity, drive innovation and enhance customer service, all of which contribute to the success and profitability of the business
 - Staff can help to build a positive reputation for the business through their interactions with customers, suppliers, and other stakeholders
 - Staff also generate costs for a business and, for many businesses, staffing costs are one of the largest costs they have. These costs include
 - Hiring and training workers
 - Managing workers as managers have to be hired
 - Paying the salaries and wages staff

- Additional benefits such as company cars, pensions, healthcare, etc
- Letting workers go often requires (redundancy payments)

Your notes

Human Resources Planning

- Human resource planning focuses on identifying how many and what kind of employees are needed
 - It looks at how employees will be
 - Recruited and deployed (used)
 - Developed and trained
 - Motivated, managed and led
- Staff costs can make up a large proportion of a businesses costs
 - Careful planning and objective monitoring of employee performance are key elements of effective financial and operational control

Human Resources Metrics that are Useful to a Business

Human Resource Metric	Explanation
Labour Productivity	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Labour productivity is a measure of output per employee over a specified period of time ▪ Businesses aim to increase the level of labour productivity to improve competitiveness
Labour Turnover	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Labour turnover measures the proportion of employees leaving a business during a specific time period ▪ High levels of labour turnover can indicate poor motivation, ineffective recruitment procedures or attractive alternative opportunities for workers
Labour Retention	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Labour retention measures the proportion of employees remaining with a business during a specific time period ▪ High levels of labour retention can indicate effective motivation and recruitment procedures or few alternative employment opportunities for workers
Absenteeism	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The absenteeism rate is a measure of the proportion of staff absent from work during a specific period of time (e.g. a day, week or month)

Your notes

- High levels of absenteeism can cause problems
 - Sick pay and the hiring of temporary staff to cover for those absent increases costs
 - Output is likely to be temporarily reduced
 - Other staff may become demotivated if they have to cover for absent workers

Internal Factors that Influence Human Resource Planning

- There are factors inside and outside of the business which can impact on the human resources planning process

Internal Factors which may Impact Human Resources Planning

Factor	Explanation
Business Objectives & Strategy	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The business's goals, objectives, and long-term plans influence the required workforce skills, competencies and size <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Entering a new market may require changes to be made to the number and type of employees required ▪ E.g. UK cafe chain Prêt à Manger plans to double the size of its business by expanding into five new markets, which will require the recruitment of at least 3,000 Team Members and Baristas by the end of 2023
Financial Situation	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Budget constraints may influence decisions related to hiring, training, pay and benefits ▪ Businesses in financial difficulty may struggle to offer attractive packages to attract employees <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ To raise their salary offer, they may have to reduce spending on training and development ▪ E.g. Alphabet plans to make significant savings as a result of slowing sales growth by reducing its global workforce by 12,000 and changing how often equipment - such as laptops used by workers - is replaced

Organisational Structure	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The structure of the organisation, including its hierarchy, reporting relationships and departmental divisions ▪ Changes in the organisational structure may require changes to workforce planning, such as redeployment, redundancy or additional recruitment <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ For example, Consumer goods company Unilever announced its intention in January 2022 to cut 1,500 jobs as part of a restructure of its global operations
Labour Relations	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The relationship between managers and workers and whether workers are members of trade unions can have a significant impact upon the workforce planning process ▪ Where worker organisation is strong, human resources are more likely to meet the demands of employees with regards to pay and conditions <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ In 2022, unionised workers at the Port of Felixstowe who had engaged in a series of disruptive strikes were rewarded with a pay increase of 15.5 per cent over two years ▪ Where there is little or no worker organisation, human resources are likely to have more flexibility over these changes
Organisational Culture	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The organisational culture may include a strong work life balance resulting in a higher likelihood that additional workers will be recruited when the demand is there <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ A recent study by TalentLMS of U.S. tech industry employees revealed that 45% of employees who experience a toxic work environment plan to quit their job because of it

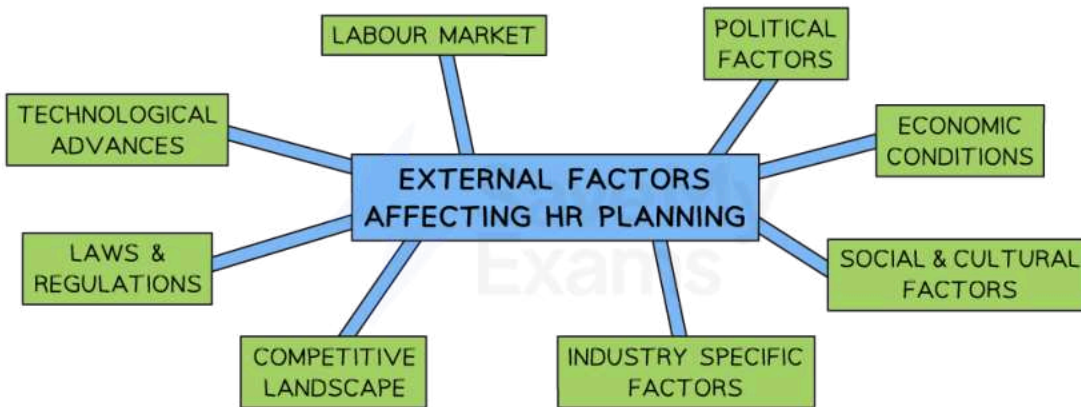

External Factors that Influence Human Resource Planning

- A range of factors beyond the control of a business can also impact the human resources planning process

External factors that affect human resources planning

- Economic conditions
 - The state of the economy, including factors such as economic growth, inflation, and unemployment rates
 - During periods of economic growth, a business may need to focus on attracting and retaining staff to meet increased demand
 - During economic downturns, they may need to implement cost-cutting measures such as redundancies or hiring freezes

- Labour market
 - The supply of suitable employees and the impact of factors such as skills shortages, labour mobility and immigration
 - Spain recently changed its migration laws to recruit more foreigners from overseas for industries with labour shortages and its primary focus for 2023 is to hire carpenters, plumbers, electricians and other workers involved in construction

- Technological advancements
 - Rapid technological change can disrupt industries and job roles, affecting HR planning
 - Automation, artificial intelligence (AI), and other emerging technologies can lead to changes in job requirements, skills needed and workforce composition
 - HR planning must anticipate these shifts and consider re-skilling or up-skilling to meet future workforce needs

- Legal and regulatory environment

Your notes

- Laws and regulations related to employment, labour relations, health and safety and immigration
 - In 2021, changes to employment law in Greece provided workers with the right to flexibility to the eight-hour working day where employees are allowed to work up to 10 hours on one day and fewer on another or take time off, as well as the right to not have to respond to emails after hours
- Social and cultural factors
 - Social and cultural factors such as societal values and demographic trends
 - Workforce diversity and inclusion, flexible work arrangements, work-life balance and employee wellbeing are examples of areas where social and cultural factors are external factors that influence workforce planning
 - French laws recognise the custom for a long lunch break and provide for five weeks paid time off for employees, as well as protecting the limit of a 35 hour working week - companies can't force employees to work overtime and if they do, they're well-compensated for it
- Political factors
 - Changes in government policies, political stability and geopolitical factors
 - Shifts in labour laws, changing tax regulations and immigration policies and cross-border trade agreements are often political focuses which can impact human resources planning
 - Australia is currently experiencing a national skills shortage in a number of occupations and its governments plan to fill this gap with a combination of training local Australians and recruiting immigrants - current in-demand skills include construction, civil engineering and nursing
- Industry-specific factors
 - Different industries may face unique external factors
 - Healthcare organisations need to consider factors such as changing regulations, demographic shifts, and advancements in medical technology
- Competitive landscape
 - The environment in which a business competes for labour and the actions and strategies of competitors influence workforce planning
 - HR planning should consider the organisation's position in the market and align recruitment strategies so that the pay and benefits reflect that
 - In the UK, businesses recruiting hospitality, health and social care workers and professional services staff and are starting to seek talent outside traditional sources by focusing on candidates' skills and potential rather than qualifications and industry experience to widen the pool of candidates

Recent changes in the working environment

Changes in Working Patterns

- For many years, employees were locked into a system of working from the office for the hours of 9–5
- Recently, a number of factors have changed the working patterns of many employees

Reasons for Changes in Working Patterns

New Trend	Explanation
Remote, Hybrid and Flexible Working	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> During the Covid pandemic many organisations moved to remote work setups to ensure business continuity and the safety of employees <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Employees worked from home and many continue to do so

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Flexible work arrangements including flextime and compressed workweeks (completing hours in 4 days instead of 5) have also become more common <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Employees have greater control over their schedules ▪ Many companies have adopted hybrid work models <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Employees work remotely for a portion of the week and come into the office for team meetings or collaborative projects
Gig Economy and Freelancing	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ More individuals are opting for freelance or contract work <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Digital platforms have made it easier for people to find freelance opportunities and connect with clients ▪ Workers have flexibility and autonomy in choosing projects and working hours
Emphasis on Work-Life Balance	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Employees are seeking more flexible work arrangements to better integrate their personal and professional lives <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Employers have implemented policies that support work-life balance, such as wellness initiatives, family-friendly policies and mental health resources
Changes in occupations	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Rapid technological change has meant that some jobs have experienced significant reductions in demand <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Examples include telephone operators, data and word processing roles and travel agents ▪ There is an increasing demand for software programmers and digital marketers

Changes in Working Preferences

- Workers are increasingly moving away from the traditional pattern of a full time, continuous career with the same employer
- There are numerous ways in which employees are making changes to their working patterns

Diagram: changes to working patterns

Examples of changes to working patterns

- Job sharing involves two or more employees work at different times to complete the tasks required for one job
 - Work is typically shared on a weekly basis, with job sharers communicating regularly to ensure tasks are not missed
 - This provides employees with flexibility whilst the employer benefits from the task being completed
- Employees may take a career break where they decide to stop working for a period of time before returning to work in the same career
 - New parents often take career breaks until children are old enough to commence formal education
 - A sabbatical is a formalised career break, frequently used by employees to study or engage in other developmental activity such as travel
- Downshifting involves a senior employee relinquishing their position to move to a lower-paid position with fewer responsibilities
 - Downshifting may occur when individuals change career or as workers approach retirement

Changes to Working Practices

- The nature of work routines has changes significantly in recent years
 - Full-time roles with permanent contracts are in decline
 - A range of alternative work routines are growing in popularity

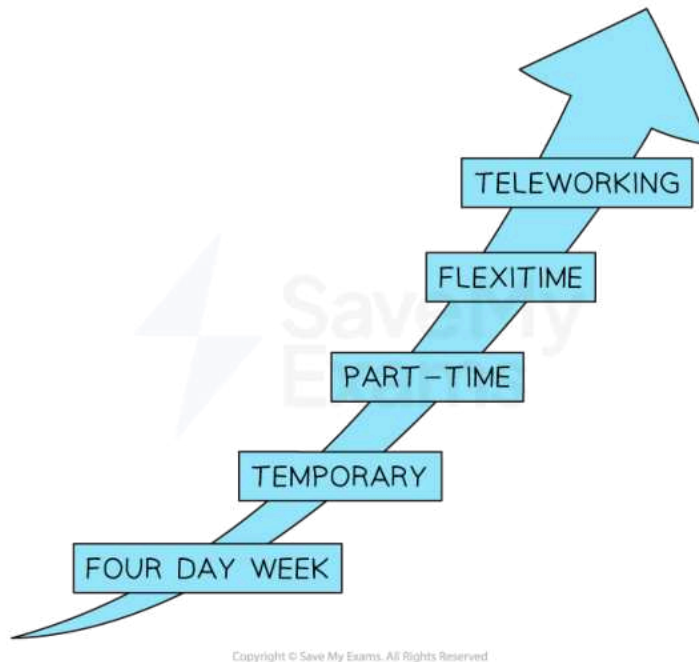

Diagram: changes to working routines

Your notes

Your notes

Examples of alternative working routines

- Teleworking involves working at home or from any other location away from the traditional workplace
 - Advances in communications technologies have allowed workers to work anywhere with a reliable internet connection
 - Worker may attend a workplace from time to time for meetings or other essential purposes
- Flexitime allows employees to work a specific amount of hours of work at times of their own choosing
 - Workers can fit work tasks around their other responsibilities such as childcare
- Part-time work is where employees work for fewer hours than those expected in a full time role
- Employees on temporary contracts work for a business for a specific period of time, often through an employment agency
- There are increased calls for businesses to offer the opportunity for employees to fulfil hours of work over four days of the week, rather than five
 - Between 2015 and 2019, Iceland ran a large 4-day workweek pilots with close to 2,500 people participating
 - The trial was considered an overwhelming success among researchers, with employees reporting improved well-being, work-life balance and productivity

Resistance to Change & Change Management

Reasons for Resistance to Change in the Workplace

- Businesses operate in a continuously changing business environment
 - Changing internal factors such as business growth, new business ownership or internal restructuring
 - Changing external factors such as changes to the market or technological advancements
- Resistance to change is a common phenomenon in the workplace
 - This is especially true when employees have little say in the design and implementation of the change
 - The existing organisational culture can also play a significant role in resistance to change, e.g. if the business culture is deeply rooted in tradition, resistance to change is more likely whereas an innovative and flexible culture may mean that employees are more receptive to change
- The following factors contribute to employee resistance

Diagram: reasons for resistance to change

Factors that contribute to employees' resistance to change

- Fear of the unknown

Your notes

- Many individuals find comfort in familiarity and could be worried about how the change will affect their roles, responsibilities, and job security
- New technologies, systems or processes often require employees to learn unfamiliar new skills
- Employees may fear that existing knowledge and skills will become obsolete, making them less valuable or potentially leading to job loss
- Loss of control
 - Change often involves a shift in power dynamics and decision-making processes
 - Employees who are accustomed to a certain level of autonomy and control may feel threatened by the change
 - They may be concerned about how the change will impact their decision-making authority or influence within the business
- Disruption of routine
 - Employees may be comfortable with their current ways of working and are hesitant to adapt to new methods
 - They may perceive the change as an inconvenience or an added burden that disrupts their working life
- Lack of trust
 - If employees doubt the intentions behind the change or have past experiences of broken promises or inconsistent communication they may be sceptical about the benefits of the proposed change
- Lack of communication and inclusion
 - When employees feel excluded or uninformed about the reasons for the change, its implications or how it will be implemented they are more likely to resist it
- Perceived losses
 - Even if the change brings overall benefits, employees may focus on what they feel they have lost such as reduced autonomy, changed job responsibilities or altered relationships with colleagues

The pace of change

- It's important to find a pace for change that is appropriate for the situation and which takes into account the needs and concerns of employees
 - If the pace of change is too fast
 - It can create resistance from overwhelmed workers who feel unprepared and that they don't have enough time to adjust

- It may not be properly thought through or planned, resulting in poor execution
- It may be difficult to communicate effectively leading to misunderstandings and confusion amongst the workforce
- If the pace of change is too slow it can result in
 - A lack of adaptability and innovation
 - A loss of momentum leading to delays or even the abandonment of the change
 - Communication efforts becoming stagnant leading to disinterest and disengagement

Change Management Strategies

- Change management strategies refer to the approaches and methods adopted to successfully navigate and implement change in a business

Steps in a Change Management Process

- There are many different types of strategies (e.g. Kotter's Change Management)
 - These strategies all have several steps in common and if a business follows these steps, then it should help to reduce resistance to change and improve the quality of the transition

Common Steps in a Change Management Process

Steps in Sequence	Explanation
1. Identify the Change & Communicate Clearly	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Clearly communicate the vision and reasons behind the change, its benefits and the expected outcomes

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Regularly update employees at all levels to keep them informed and address any concerns or questions they may have Provide support throughout the change process, recognising that change can be stressful for employees
2. Plan & Resource the Change	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Ensure that adequate resources are identified and available in order to implement the change <ul style="list-style-type: none"> A lack of resources is an indicator that the change has not been properly planned which may undermine employees' faith in the proposed change
3. Provide Strong Leadership	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Leaders should demonstrate their commitment to the change and provide a clear vision that inspires employees to embrace the change Leaders should also lead by example and be visible throughout the process
4. Engage Stakeholders	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Identify key stakeholders who will be affected by the change and involve them early in the process Seek their input, address their concerns, and actively engage them in decision-making <ul style="list-style-type: none"> This helps build support and ownership for the change.
5. Train & Develop	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Provide adequate training and development programs to equip employees with the skills and knowledge needed to adapt to the change <ul style="list-style-type: none"> This could include workshops, seminars, online courses, or coaching sessions The goal is to ensure employees feel confident and competent in their new roles
6. Appoint Change Agents	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Appoint change agents or champions within the organisation who can help drive and facilitate the change process These individuals should be enthusiastic, influential, and capable of supporting and encouraging others during the transition
7. Provide Feedback	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Gather feedback throughout the change process by regularly assessing progress, identifying any barriers or resistance and making

	adjustments if needed <ul style="list-style-type: none">Collecting and acting on feedback from employees demonstrates that their opinions are valued and helps to reduce resistance to change
8. Celebrate Success	<ul style="list-style-type: none">Recognise and celebrate milestones and achievements along the way<ul style="list-style-type: none">For example, acknowledge individuals and teams for their contributions and share success stories to inspire othersThis boosts morale, motivates employees, and reinforces the positive aspects of the change

- Large-scale changes can be overwhelming so it's often beneficial to break them down into smaller, manageable phases
 - This allows employees to adapt gradually and build momentum as they experience early successes, helping generate support for further change
